

TO BE AN IDIOT

BELIEF IS REQUIRED

A Guide to the Choices

by Chongo

Nature creates them, but it is on their own that idiots find each other, and then discover that they can unite, together, in a common front, dedicated to the pursuit of even greater stupidity, because now they need no longer be alone in the idiocy of their very personal lunacy.

TO BE AN IDIOT

A Guide to the Choices

by Chongo

INTRODUCTION

Idiocy needs no introduction. Its details, however, do. This work is an attempt to list the most commonly available choices for common idiocy, those that are absolutely certain to be in error, which are those that are based purely upon senseless and baseless belief. The choices are the details. And there are many,

Clearly, to be an idiot, one must first abandon all reason, ignoring altogether any critical reasoning whatsoever that might lead one to their senses. Doing so puts one in the perfect position for the most enduring forms of common idiocy, so many of which bring laughter to the world. Succeeding is achieved by basing one's life decisions upon ideas and principles that either lack physical meaning or are flatly untrue. For making decisions based upon ideas and principles that either lack physical meaning or are flatly untrue, while believing that they are instead physically meaningful or consistent with factual truth, great, deep, and genuine faith is definitely required. What follows are the most common beliefs that serve common and widespread idiocy today, many, thousands of years old.

Choice Thirty-One: Believe that physical phenomena operates in a particular way for the sake of shaping physical events to the advantage or disadvantage of a particular people, geographic location, government, political party, religion, belief, economic system, gender, ideology, pursuit, or anything else, over any others.

Choice Thirty-Two: Believe that reciting affirmations written by people who don't even know you well enough to even care, will actually improve your life-long sense of self-confidence.

Choice Thirty-Five: Believe that “intelligent design” (reflecting forethought) and its foundational “irreducible complexity” are demonstrable natural principles accounting for the origin of species, albeit only a single one, as well as the corresponding wants (the will) that each and every individual in it MUST have in order to survive and replicate, and that design by random trial and error, the Theory of Evolution, does not account for the origin of species.

Choice Thirty-Six: Believe evolution is not a synonym for “improvement.”

Choice Ninety-Seven: Believe that the possibilities for idiocy do not far exceed the number of idiots present in the world that are capable of undertaking them.

Choice Ninety-Eight: Believe that what idiots do and say do not inspire hilarious quotes, even though this idiocy is more often a grave tragedy for human prosperity, in spite of its enormous entertainment value.

Choice Ninety-Nine: Believe that the details of idiocy are readily understood by all idiots equally.
